State Senator Kevin Engler Announces New Interim Chief of Staff

JEFFERSON CITY – State Sen. Kevin Engler, R-Farmington, this week added Gary Romine to his office team as the new interim chief of staff.

Like Engler, Romine is also from Farmington, Mo, and will now be charged with assisting the senator with legislative measures, researching issues, and addressing the concerns of constituents. Engler said Romine's leadership skills and experience in the legislative process will benefit the 3rd Senatorial District as a whole.

"Gary is a sound enhancement for my team because he joins us as a seasoned individual when it comes to serving Missouri," Engler said. "It is important to have someone on the ground who knows how to represent the best interests of Missouri citizens and who is so familiar with the responsibilities of state government."

Romine owns a small farm in western Ste. Genevieve County and a rent-to-own business with eight locations in southeast Missouri. He has served as a federal and state legislative liaison for two trade associations. His understanding of the business and political spheres will be useful in his new position.

"It has been an ambition of mine since high school to have an opportunity to serve Missouri from Jefferson City," Romine said. "I am excited to have the privilege to assist Senator Engler and the district he was elected to serve."
